Contained definition: Catholic theology is a scientific or methodologically elaborated and systematically arranged body of knowledge that deals with the study of divine revelation grasped by faith and reason, reaching its culmination in the person and action of Jesus Christ. Theology in general always aims at anchoring and explaining in terminological terms, in a manner comprehensible to human thought, this or that divine revelation, the substantive and formal nature of faith, its theoretical and practical foundations and models. Catholic theology specifically uses scientific methods and procedures to investigate for this purpose, alongside biblical sources, the Christian tradition of the patristic period and also the continuous Magisterium of the Church as its specific theological sources (loci theologici). The way theology works is rational, discursive and confirmatory. Its scientificity is manifested in particular by the fact that it uses analytical methods and procedures in the synthesis of knowledge that are comparable to the methodologies of its related disciplines. At the same time, it is open to scientific criticism and to advances in scientific research, both in terms of innovative approaches and in reviewing and correcting results already achieved. The core knowledge of Catholic Theology also connects and correlates in content with the object of research of some disciplines: systematic and practical philosophy, history of philosophy and world history, pedagogy and psychology, law and social work, as well as religious studies, rhetoric and hermeneutics, philology of biblical languages, and textual exegesis. It is mainly based on biblical, moral, pastoral and dogmatic theology, Christian philosophy and Church history, liturgics, homiletics, catechetics, canon law and the social doctrine of the Church.
